GOSSIP WOLF

Isaiah Collier at the Copenhagen Jazz Festival © NEILS GETHER

CHICAGO JAZZ SAXOPHONIST and composer Isaiah Collier began writing The World Is on Fire, his new album with the Chosen Few, before COVID-19 hit the States. His approach to the music took its shape in part from the pandemic and from racial-justice protests spurred by extrajudicial killings of Black people (George Floyd, Breonna Taylor, Ahmaud Arbery, Sandra Bland). "There's a whole lot of stuff going on," Collier says, "and it's no longer up to interpretation if it affects us or not." This directness and urgency also comes through in the heated, complex interplay throughout The World Is on Fire, his final album with this iteration of the Chosen Few.

A furry ear to the ground of the local music scene

"This is something that speaks to metaphorically being set ablaze in all aspects of it," Collier says. "Mentally and spiritually, emotionally, this is on fire. I mean, we're losing ozone layer here. We're losing colors in the UV spectrum because of the stuff that's going on. This planet is warming up as we speak." Collier describes The World Is on Fire as a record about priorities, and he made sure that his bandmates—bassist Jeremiah Hunt, drummer Michael Shekwoaga Ode, and pianist Julian Davis Reid—brought their best to the recordings. That often meant confronting injustices and calamities on a personal level.

"We'd record a little bit, and I'd go, 'Whoa, that's cool we did that, but more,'" Collier says. "It's one thing to think about a situation and go, 'Man, that's unfortunate.' It's another thing to think about a situation and go, 'Whoa, that could have been me.'" Collier points out that bearing witness to global suffering and harm is an important part of being able to fight them. "We have to acknowledge them," he says. "Verbs are not up for interpretation. They are what they are, and nouns are the state of what they are. 'The world' is the noun, and 'it is on fire' is the verb. But that doesn't mean it has to stay this way."

The Chosen Few formed almost nine years ago, and Collier says he's been feeling that it's time to move on from the band. "When you think about a person like John Coltrane, a lot of the music we're still chasing after was from a five-year period," he says. "He's been gone for over 50 years, and he changed the history of music within a five-year period. . . . I've seen what I've done with this, and also it's just time for something different." Collier and the Chosen Few play eight sets during a four-night stand at the Jazz Showcase that runs Thursday, October 10, through Sunday, October 13.

ON SATURDAY, OCTOBER 12, Emily Carlile Nichols, aka Carlile, headlines Epiphany Center for the Arts to celebrate her long-gestating debut solo album, Human Human, which came out in August. Nichols first dipped her toes into performing live music while growing up in the suburbs, and in the early 2010s, she cofounded psychedelic neosoul group Woo Park. But she's also
