GOSSIP WOLF

A furry ear to the ground of the local music scene

Sima Cunningham at Yoko Ono's Sky Landing in Jackson Park SHANNON MARKS

ON FRIDAY, AUGUST 30, Chicago singer-songwriter Sima Cunningham will release the long-gestating solo album High Roller via New York-based label Ruination Record Company. "I've been working on the solo record for the better part of a decade," Cunningham says. "Some of these songs are ten-plus years old, some are five years old. Some are more fresh, from the last couple years." In 2014, she and Macie Stewart founded Finom (the art-rock duo formerly known as Ohmme), and that's been taking up most of Cunningham's musical energy ever since. Finom released their third full-length, Not God, in May, and Cunningham says it felt like time to put out High Roller. "I've been so deep inside of Finom," she says, "and it felt like the right moment in my heart. I was like, 'I feel really ready for these songs right now. I feel ready to share them.'"

Cunningham wrote the material on High Roller about several kinds of intimate relationships. "I love to write songs about the romanticism of friendship," she says. "I think that friendships are so rich and important and should be treated with the same reverence and adoration as romantic partnership." Cunningham wrote the gently psychedelic "For Liam" about her younger brother, singer-songwriter Liam Kazar. "That feeling that I write about in the song, of 'I would die for you,' I've never felt so protective of anyone else in the world," she says, "until I had a kid."

High Roller closes with "Adonai," a tribute to Cunningham's friend Chris Jackson, a gay composer who took his life when she was a high school senior. She wrote "Adonai" when she was 19, drawing on Leonard Bernstein's "Chichester Psalms," which she liked to sing with Jackson when they were both in the Chicago Children's Choir. "It was really hard for me to feel like the song lived up to how I wanted it to exist for him," she says.

Cunningham says she took inspiration from Harry Nilsson's "anything goes" approach to songwriting for High Roller, and throughout the album she juggles rootsy rockers, flamboyant quasi-symphonic ballads, and tender acoustic tunes. She produced the album with her husband, multi-instrumentalist Dorian Gehring, at Logan Square's Fox Hall Studio, which they run together. "Dorian is an amazing musician, producer, and recording engineer," Cunningham says. "We've just been trying the songs on every which way—like, we always knew we liked the songs, but it was how to present them."

"I've been playing these songs for a decade, and a lot of people know these songs even though they were not recorded at all," Cunningham says. "I feel relief that people can take it home with them."

IN JUNE, CHICAGO RAPPER and librarian Roy Kinsey launched a GoFundMe for Rapbrary, a nonprofit devoted to preserving rap as a literary art form and creating sanctuaries for banned and challenged books. Kinsey began focusing on the Rapbrary concept last year, and it's taken off quicker than he anticipated; he's already received book donations, and he's found a home for the first Rapbrary location, which will be in Belmont Cragin events space Ironweed (5112 W. Grand).

"I understand that there's an urgency," Kinsey says. "Rapbrary absolutely needs to exist now, especially when we think about 46 out of 50 states having banned and challenged books, and how so many books—and authors as well—are being targeted and challenged." On Sunday, September 1, Thalia Hall hosts an official launch party for Rapbrary.

Rapbrary fits right in with Kinsey's other work, which he nurtures with a profound love of history and literature. "In the tradition of hip-hop, one of the five elements was spreading knowledge, and it's not a thing that we talk about often," he says. "I really want Rapbrary to be preserved, understood, and studied as one of those [examples] of Black intellectual thought."

At Sunday's party, Kinsey will perform songs from his next album, A Legacy Project. He's bringing a few unannounced special guests and a deep team of talented Chicago DJs. "It's going to be mostly a dance party," he says, "understanding that literary folks like to shake ass too." Tickets start at $25; the event begins at 5 PM, and it's open to ages 17 and up.

ON WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 28, local composer and producer Cesar Pino, stage name C3zr, releases a remix of his upbeat samba-inflected instrumental "Agua Viva," just in time for you to add it to your end-of-summer playlist. Before COVID, Pino was mostly a pianist (he'd gotten a toehold in the jazz scene), but lockdown pushed him toward electronic music, which he could make at home. His debut album as C3zr, Round Voyage, hit streaming services this March, and he's recently begun dropping bonus tracks from a deluxe vinyl version scheduled for this fall. The new remix is the second so far, following June's live version of "B.B.B.," a tune cowritten by and featuring Chicago vocalist Ifeanyi Elswith. The "Agua Viva" remix is by rapper and producer Pugs Atomz, one of C3zr's labelmates on Los Angeles-based 600 Block Records, and his lively lyrics and spirited flow make fitting additions to the song's feel-good energy. —TYRA NICOLE TRICHE AND LEOR GALIL
